How Your Toddler's Brain Is Developing

Many brain cell connections are forming now, especially in the part of your child's brain that controls emotional development (the limbic system). Connections are also developing in the thinking part of the brain (the cerebral cortex). Brain connections are formed by a child's experiences. The more often the experience happens, the stronger the brain connections become.

Brain connections that are seldom used are now being removed by a natural process called synaptic pruning. This helps your toddler's brain work faster and more efficiently. Brain cell connections will continue to be added, strengthened and removed throughout your child's life. It takes many years for the brain to be fully developed.

Although you can't see these changes in your toddler's brain, you'll know it's developing by how:

- her language skills are growing
- she explores
- she learns about her emotions
- she learns how to get along with others
